ARCHDIOCESE OF DETROIT TELLS MICHAEL VORIS HE CAN'T USE THE WORD "CATHOLIC"

According to a press release issued December 15, and signed by the Detroit Archdiocesan Communications officer, Joe Kohn: "The Archdiocese has informed Mr. Voris and Real Catholic TV, RealCatholicTV.com, that it does not regard them as being authorized to use the word 'Catholic' to identify or promote their public activities...The Church encourages the Christian faithful to promote or sustain a variety of apostolic undertakings but, nevertheless, prohibits any such undertaking from claiming the name Catholic without the consent of the competent ecclesiastical authority."

However, according to a December 23 story, published by LifeSiteNews.com, "Michael Voris, while he may be the star of RealCatholicTV's programming, is not the owner of the website. The owner is Marc Brammer who lives in South Bend, Indiana, in the diocese of Bishop Kevin Rhoades." Brammer told LifeSiteNews, "I own RealCatholicTV.com. I contracted with Michael Voris to produce video content for that website and I pay him for it. It is a business relationship between me and Michael. If all of a sudden now there's this tussle over the use of the word 'Catholic' I'll deal with it through competent ecclesial authority." (Brammer, however, has not been asked by his bishop, Bishop Kevin Rhoades to cease using the word Catholic.) The Real Catholic TV production facility is in Ferndale, MI, in the Detroit Archdiocese.

Although the Archdiocese of Detroit states that it "has been in communication with Mr. Michael Voris and his media partner," Voris says that communication was only one way. Voris told LifeSiteNews that "he has requested a meeting with Archdiocesan officials seven times to discuss the matter, but each time he has been ignored or rebuffed." As you may recall from our December newsletter, Michael Voris will be the speaker at our Saturday, May 12 Chapter meeting.

Book of the Month: "The Truth about Therese"

Author: Henri Gheon

Publisher: Sophia Institute Press, 2011 (org. 1934)

"Scores of books have been written about St. Therese of Lisieux, but this is the first aimed at those persons, Catholic or not, who resist her, put off by all those roses and crudely painted plastic statues...and even by her virtues. (Not long before she died, Therese's confessor assured her she had never committed a mortal sin!) Author Henri Gheon was once among those put off by Therese's sweet reputation and by the tinsel, sugary devotions to this "little saint." Then he discovered how many good Catholics, at home with such simple devotions, were soon freed, without even realizing it, from the pretty-pretties that led them on, finding the real Therese beneath the sugar roses and puffy clouds, behind the platitudes and pet-names that took all the salt out of her heroic story. They discovered - as will readers of these remarkable pages - the real Therese of Lisieux..."

"Scottish Bishops Tell Government It Can't Rewrite Law On Marriage"

Scotland's bishops have vowed to oppose the government plan to legalize same-sex marriage, which Keith Cardinal O'Brien described as an "attempt to rewrite human nature."

In a homily delivered September 11 to politicians, reported The Scotsman's Andrew Whitaker, the cardinal said: "The Church esteems the institution of marriage as the most stable building block upon which any family can rest.

"The view of the Church is clear: No government can rewrite human nature; the family and marriage existed before the state and are built on the union between a man and woman. Any attempt to redefine marriage is a direct attack on a foundational building block of society and will be strenuously opposed."

The Scottish bishops' conference also released a statement by Bishop Philip Tartaglia of Paisley, which stated: "Marriage is an institution which does not owe its existence or rationale to governments or legislatures...governments do not have the authority to say what marriage is or to change its nature or to decree that people of the same sex can marry."

The statement declared:

"1) Marriage has always existed in order to bring men and women together so that the children born of those unions will have a mother and a father.

"2) For that reason, same-sex unions cannot fulfill the nature and purpose of marriage. Marriage, therefore, should not be treated as an equality issue. Article 161 of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights operates on the clear principle that marriage is a union of a man and a woman. To dismantle this understanding is to undermine the framework of existing human rights legislation.

"3) Marriage is an institution which does not owe its existence or rationale to governments or legislatures. Marriage is a human reality which is prior to politics and positive law. The duty of government is to recognize marriage and to protect it for the common good. But governments do not have the authority to say what marriage is or to change its nature or to decree that people of the same sex can marry.

"But governments do not have the authority to say what marriage is or to change its nature or to decree that people of the same sex can marry."

"4) A government which favors and allows for same-sex 'marriage' does wrong. It fails in its duty to society. It undermines the common good. It commits an act of cultural vandalism. Such a government does not deserve the trust which the nation, and including many in the Catholic community, has shown in it.

"5) The government's intention to permit religious bodies to register same-sex unions and celebrate same-sex 'marriages,' however disingenuously framed, constitutes pressure to initiate these practices, and, as such, is already beginning to infringe [on] legitimate religious freedom. As I wrote before in a letter to Prime Minister David Cameron, government should know with absolute certainty that the Catholic church will never register civil partnerships nor celebrate same-sex 'marriage,' 'not now, not in the future, not ever.'

"6) Government should not be persuaded by voices which declare that any opposition to same-sex 'marriage' is the result of homophobic bigotry. This is not only false, but is itself an illiberal and undemocratic intolerance which only seeks to close down rational argument and to intimidate people into acquiescence.

"7) Similarly, the government should not be impressed by arguments which claim that opposition to same-sex 'marriage' is based on religious values which do not come from reason and therefore relate only to the private good of persons. Such arguments are tantamount to an incitement to religious intolerance. In point of fact, faith and reason cannot be set against each other so readily...In fact, in all the great religions marriage between a man and a woman has from time immemorial been considered to be part of the natural order and intrinsic to the public good.

"8) Moreover, with the introduction a few years ago of civil partnerships for same-sex unions, people of the same sex do not need marriage to live as civilly recognized couples who enjoy the same legal protections as married couples. This conclusion comes into even clearer focus when note is taken of the fact that the number of civil partnerships has actually been in decline in Scotland. The Office for National Statistics records that in 2006 there were 1,047 civil partnerships, in 2007 there were 688, in 2008 there were 525, in 2009 there were 498 and in 2010 there were 465. While it is true that the number of marriages is inclined to fluctuate year on year around the 28,000-30,000 mark, these statistics for civil partnerships suggest that the case for disturbing the settled nature of marriage is at best unconvincing even from the point of view of bare statistics about the likely numbers of same-sex people in Scotland who wish to be legally committed couples."
